

Mark Robinson SC

Barrister, Maurice Byers Chambers

Mark is a senior counsel based in Sydney practising in administrative law and general law.

He was a founding part-time Judicial Member of the Administrative Decisions Tribunal of New South Wales in the General Division and on the Appeal Panel - hearing matters on privacy and freedom of information. He served on that tribunal for seven years.

For sixteen years, Mark was an occasional part-time lecturer in undergraduate “Administrative Law” in the Law Faculties of the University of Sydney and the University of New South Wales.

For twenty four years, Mark acted as the lead author and editor of New South Wales Administrative Law, a two volume looseleaf service, published by Thomson Reuters (since 1996) which covers Supreme Court judicial review, the NSW Civil and Administrative Tribunal (NCAT), statutory interpretation, freedom of information and privacy.

Mark has authored and edited three books in recent years (each published by Thomson Reuters):

- Judicial Review: The Laws of Australia published in 2014, with an encyclopaedic coverage of judicial review Australia wide;
- NCAT – Practice and Procedure, 2nd edition, published in 2020;
- Administrative Law: The Laws of Australia, published in 2017. It concerns State and Federal tribunals and it also covers the Ombudsmen and freedom of information around Australia.

He has a broad practice, acting for and against State and Federal Governments and local councils and, in a constitutional law case, for the Hells Angels.
