

Jeremy Hanrahan

Partner, Lander & Rogers

Jeremy is a highly experienced workplace relations lawyer with more than two decades' combined experience in house and in private practice.

Jeremy is known for providing clients with both strategic and transactional advice across complex human resources, industrial and employee relations, and workplace health and safety laws – including in the areas of:

- COVID-19 workforce strategies
- federal and state government procurement compliance in the construction industry
- enterprise bargaining
- industrial action and disputation, wages and entitlements compliance
- processes across the entire employment life-cycle, including investigations, disciplinary action, terminations, and claims/litigation

Prior to joining Lander & Rogers, Jeremy was the Group Head of Industrial Relations at Lendlease and was the senior in-house employment and industrial relations lawyer to the Lendlease Group.

Jeremy also has significant expertise in the aged care / retirement living sector including advising on potential outcomes and impacts arising from the Fair Work Commission's work value case for the aged care industry, and he was appointed by the Attorney-General's Department as an expert advisor to the COVID-19 industrial relations reform working groups in 2020.
