About Elizabeth Wild

Elizabeth Wild has almost 30 years' experience, and is a specialist, in all areas of environmental law, with particular expertise managing issues relating to contaminated land and remediation law.

Liz advises on all legal and strategic aspects associated with contaminated land, including disputes regarding all forms of contamination, strategies for the investigation, remediation and marketing of contaminated land and obtaining planning and environmental approvals for the remediation and development of contaminated land.

She has been involved in many of the landmark cases in this area. Liz acts for both polluters and claimants in a number of environmental disputes involving the torts of nuisance and negligence, including in relation to PFAS contamination.
