

Jenny Stathis

Principal Lawyer, ACCC's Regulatory Law Unit

Jenny is a leading regulatory, competition and consumer law expert across government and top tier law practice, with extensive experience in ACCC investigations, enforcement and issues facing government lawyers.

She is currently a Principal Lawyer seconded to the ACCC's Regulatory Law Unit where she provides advice on various regulatory issues such as Digital ID, the scams prevention framework and the consumer data right. Her substantive role is in the Competition and Consumer Law Unit of the ACCC where she provides strategic direction and overall case management of investigations and litigation.

Jenny is also a part-time General Member of the NSW Civil and Administrative Tribunal (Consumer and Commercial Division), where she hears and conciliates wide-ranging disputes, including in relation to residential tenancies and consumer claims.

Jenny has also undertaken two secondments to the legal group of the Australian Prudential Regulation Authority (APRA), most recently as a Special Counsel.

She has also practised in top tier firms - the Competition & Trade group of Freshfields Bruckhaus Deringer in London, and the Litigation Group (specialising in competition and consumer law) of Allens (formerly Allen Allen & Hemsley) in Sydney.

Jenny is a longstanding member of the Law Society's Government Solicitors and Business Law Committees, and until recently, the Australian Government Legal Service's Engagement and Communications Committee.
